Nutritional Support for Wound Healing - WoundCareCenters.org

Nutritional support for wound healing can greatly affect the three stages of the process: the inflammatory, proliferative, and remodeling phases. Poor nutrition can prolong every stage of the wound healing process and cause the development of non-healing wounds. Significant wounds can increase the nutritional demands of the body, which means that a patient will need more nutrients than usual to allow for optimum wound healing.

Wound Care: Basics Concepts and Treatments Jennifer A. ...

Whether a patient's wound is an acute wound or a chronic wound, that healing cascade should be the same. The difference is an acute wound will move through the phases much quicker and we will get healing in a quicker time than we will with chronic wounds. Hopefully, with good wound care, we are able to move these chronic wounds through these phases in a reasonable fashion as well. So, as I
